Belgrade Edgy on Soviet-Bulgarian Cooperation

The Yugoslavs are once again openly criticizing the Soviets and Bulgaria for their stands on disputed issues involving the two Balkan countries.

The latest target of Yugoslav ire is an article commemorating the 30th anniversary of the "defeat of fascism" by Marshal Yakubovsky, supreme commander of the Warsaw Pact. Yakubovsky's claim that the Soviet army played a key role in organizing all the liberation efforts in Eastern Europe has always sharply offended Belgrade, the more so in this case because it supports a disputed Bulgarian version of the war. Yugoslav journalists are denouncing the Soviet and Bulgarian lines as a deliberate attempt to minimize the extensive Yugoslav and Albanian guerrilla war effort, which received no Soviet support until late in the war.

It is not yet clear how far Belgrade intends to carry its denunciations of the Yakubovsky article. Tito is currently in the Macedonian Republic--which borders on Bulgaria--for talks with local leaders.

The week before Tito's arrival, Macedonian authorities had held a series of meetings to discuss border security in towns adjacent to Bulgaria. The atmosphere thus appears primed for Tito to restate Yugoslav determination to fend off any pressures from this quarter.

Although the dispute over Yakubovsky's article may at first glance appear to be a simple difference in historical viewpoint, it means much more to the Yugoslavs, who see in it an explicit attack on their independent defense and foreign policies. [REDACTED]

Yugoslav sensitivities go beyond bruised pride, ultimately resting on wariness that collusion between Bulgaria and the USSR could pose a threat to Yugoslav national security. [REDACTED]

Yugoslavs Protest Assassination Attempt in Lyons

The Yugoslavs on Sunday delivered diplomatic protests to both the French ambassador in Belgrade and the Foreign Ministry in Paris as a result of the terrorist attack on its vice consul in Lyons the previous day. Belgrade's angry reaction presages a determined effort to persuade France to crack down on Yugoslav emigres.

Belgrade's protest included demands that Paris take the "most vigorous measures" to find and punish the terrorists and hinted that the incident could affect bilateral relations. The Yugoslavs probably hope to convince Paris that it should suppress all anti-Titoist emigres. Similar pressures on the West Germans and the Australians have resulted in the denial of safe haven to a number of emigre-terrorist groups.

A Croat emigre organization, the National Resistance, has claimed responsibility for machine-gunning the Yugoslav diplomat. The National Resistance is a particularly vicious terrorist group that organized both the assassination of the Yugoslav ambassador to Sweden in 1971 and an aerial hijacking that led to the subsequent release of the assassins. The group's leader reportedly [redacted]

New Socio-Economic Institute in Leningrad

The USSR Academy of Sciences has announced (in Vestnik, No. 2, 1975) the establishment of an Institute of Socio-Economic Problems in Leningrad. The institute's director will be Geliy Nikolayevich Cherkasov, a relative unknown who was previously a professor at the Leningrad Finance Economics Institute. The new institute is being organized from the existing Leningrad "sektors" of the Institute of Philosophy, the Institute of Sociological Research and the Institute of Economics, and the Leningrad branches of the Central Economic-Mathematical Institute and the Institute of the History of Natural Science and Technology. The Institute of Socio-Economic Problems will be subordinate to the Academy's Economics Department, although the Philosophy and Law Department will direct the research which relates to those fields.
